If you have been typing job related search terms into Google lately you may have noticed a change in the way your results are displayed. This is a result of Google's latest job searching tool, Google Jobs. Google Jobs is not a job board in and of itself; its function is simply to make job searching easier by changing the way results are displayed.

For example, say you're looking for a histotechnician position in Illinois. If you google "Histotechnician Illinois Jobs" you will find a new "Jobs" section above the normal search results. This section is filled with results that Google has indexed and recognized as jobs.

NSH's Career Center is powered by one of the companies that Google partnered with to develop this resource, therefore all of the jobs on the NSH Job Board are indexed to display in these results, as in this above example.
